The Machiavellian moment: Florentine political thought and the tradition of the Atlantic Republic. 2:7; 3.19). The Hebrew word nephesh, traditionally translated “living soul”, but more properly understood as “living creature”, is the same word used for all breathing creatures and does not refer to anything immortal. p. 80. In Qohelet’s time, it was perhaps people who speculated that humans would enjoy a positive life after death, while animals would not. Childs, Old Testament Theology in a Canonical Context (Fortress, 1985), 199. 2:20); a soul can be saved or taken (Mark 3:4). They conclude that the formula to create man is man equal body plus soul. Human beings, like the beasts of the field, are made of “the dust of the earth”, and at death they return to that dust. (Gen. Qohelet stresses that there is no evidence of this”., Goldingay, “Theology of the Old Testament”, volume 2, pp. 107-108 (2001).And while the living may hope that the absence of God will again give way to the presence of God, the dead are forever separated from the presence of God.241 Death signifies the end of communion with God and communion with men.
